beth Palace of the Bishop of Honolula, the Dean of Rochester made some allusions to the duties of accordance with the law of 1869." Under the a missionary bishop, which, as reported at Honolutu, have raised quite a little storm of indignation. As the report stands the Dean appears to describe Honolulu as inhabited by "heathens and the refuse of civilization who mingle with them." Probably bearing in mind the late Bishop Patteson and his ever that may be it has received a very literal interpretation in the capital of the Sandwich Islands. A Honolulu paper, "the oldest in the Pacific," established in 1843, points to their churches, schools, benevoient institutions, hospitals, Christian homes. and other elements of civilization, and claims for cities of the world, but, as it would appear, of one of the most exemplary. Honolulu, we learn, embraces a population of some ten or twelve thousand. One-lourth is made up of foreigners, principally Americans. English Germans, and other nations The majority are Hawaiians, and the writer declares that so far from the condition and character of the people being as described it is entirely the reverse. He asserts that there is not a city or town anywhere to be found on this broad earth which is better entitled to be styled a Christian city: and be thus perience of the chief cities of the Old and New World. There are, in fact, we are assured, few cities like it where the attendance at the various churches and schools is more regular; "where castle, the inhabitants of all classes better protected may be his calling." It is very pleasant to have such a report from Honolulu, or, indeed, from any other place in the world; and this is not by any means a startling report, but very much in accord with what we have heard frequently before. Bishop Willis will probably find plenty of work to undertake as a missionary in the Pacific notwithstanding; tion, it will doubtless be very gratifying to him to

The Hemp Banana.

LANAI, August 8d, 1872. To the Editor of the Pacific Commercial Advertiser MY DEAR SIR .- I shall be very glad to be informed, as you kindly propose to do in last week's paper, where I can obtain some plants of the manilla hemp banana, or musa textilis of botanists. I knew something about its culture in Malaysia, where it is commonly called the Abaca. Like all of the banana family it is easily propagated by suckers. About 1000 plants will stand upon one acre of ground, and we have in these islands the best of lands and climate for its cultivation. When the fruit is about to form, the plant is cut down. The stem is then cut open lengthwise, and is found to contain a large quantity of filaments, some coarse, fitted only for cordage, and others as fine as the thread of the silk worm's spinning. These filaments are about six feet long, and are hackled and sorted like flax.

Yours respectfully, [We beg to inform our correspondent that seeds of the musa textilis or hemp banana can be obtained of Antone, the gardener in charge of Dr. Hillebrand's and greatly encouraged the doctor, who continued premises, Nunanu valley. est at the present time ; VACCINATION AS A CURE OF SMALL-POX. Mr. R. C. Furley, in a letter to the Scotsman, soys he is able to prove that vaccination is not only a preventive of disease but a cure. It is, he says, ascertained that when a person liable to take small-pox is exposed to the infection, the poison circulates in the blood for eight days before producing any febrile symptoms; then commence headache, sickness, pain in the back, saffused eyes, and a peculiarly whitefurred tongue—a group of symptoms that belong to no other disease, and which last for three days. It has been held and acted on since Jenner's great discovery, more than eighty years ago, that it is not only wrong but fatal to vaccinate any one during that stage of the disease, or the subsequent one when the eruption makes its appearance. But Mr. Furley says he can show from cases under his care at the present time that if you vaccinate during the febrile stage the fever is slightly increased, but the eruption does not make its appearance, and if you vaccinate during the cruptive stage the cruption is immediately arrested. The mature lymph overtakes the immature poison, and the disease terminates If the eruption has gone the length of having white tops, there is danger of infection; if not, it dies away as and, if he had formed wrong impressions of Hono- pimples. Mr. Furley feels confident that if every ulu from anything that transpired at his consecra- doctor were to vaccinate each case of small-pox that comes under his care at once, many hundreds of find them dispersed on his arrival .- London Weekly lives would be spared and many thousands of pounds would be saved. In the mean time, be invites members of he medical profession to accompany him through the patients he has under his care, and thus possibly stamp out the epidemic in a few weeks.

A REWARKABLE SURGICAL CASE. -In a Waterbury, Conn., factory, a year ago, Miss Hattie Thomas caught her hair in a revolving shaft and was completely scalped, even one ear and one eyebrow being torn off. Of course it was supposed that she would die, but Dr. Bartlett finding her likely to rally from the first effects of the accident. determined to try the new process of " skin grafting," with what success the Waterbury American informs us as follows :

" About six weeks after the accident, when the wound had been brought into a healthy state by suppuration, the experiment was tried, the patient herself furnishing the first " seed skin " from her arm. The method of removing the skin required is simply to clasp the piece between the thumb from the arm of Miss Thomas, but the excessive discharge from the head and wound, and the additional drain from the new wounds necessitated by the removal of the skin, made it absolutely necessary that the doctor procure his supply of " seed ekin " from other Durees. Miss Gibson, DEAR COMMERCIAL-I want you to come up here | her faithful nurse and particular friend before and after the accident, volunteered to furnish the next supply, and when this lady was exhausted, and the experiment continued to show every indication of success, the ductor mutilated his own arm for the benefit of his patient and the elucidation of science. And not the least noteworthy circumstance is that a number of the young lady friends of Miss Thomas came forward and volunteered to furnish as far as they could, whatever new matepieces of " seed-skin," varying in size-the larger pieces being sufficient to cover a silver hall-dullar. These large pieces were, in some instances, di-vided and subdivided, so that the number of septransplanted, would soon grow and extend from ered with a new growth of skin."
